Getting website traffic is one of the biggest challenges to new website owners. You have a great site that you think people will love, but for one reason or another, few people ever come, unless you know the secrets to getting visitors on your site.

This technique is well-known among the leaders who market things online, and now, you have the very same information. Use this manual, and you will see your website receive 1,000 visitors or even more in a few hours, sometimes in just minutes.

How It Works

The concept is really simple. You have a web page made, or create one. Ideally, you create a new page in the way described below.

To get the maximum visitors, your destination web page should be interesting to a lot of people, and the best way to do this is to create content with human interest in it.

By human interest, I mean the stuff that MSN and Yahoo post on their messenger sites each day – stuff that gets your attention and makes you click to read it.

I'll describe how to make human interest content below.

Once you have the page created, the next thing to do is link to it.

There are a few places you can link from that will generate 1,000 visitors quicky, so let me give you the sites, and then describe how you link so that a lot of people click over to your site.

Where To Link

Once your web page is ready, the very best places you can link to it is from these sites:

http://www.stumbleupon.com

http://www.digg.com

http://www.propeller.com

http://www.reddit.com

Personally, I like propeller (formerly known as netscape.com). I have had 2,000 visitors in 65 minutes after adding one "story". Impressive, but you need to be ready for them!

All these sites require you to register for free, and then confirm your email address (just check for a confirmation email and click the link in the email to activate your account).
For stumble upon, you need to install the toolbar, and then it makes fast traffic as simple as clicking a button and writing a few sentences about your site.

Once you have the stumble upon toolbar installed, you simply visit your web page, and then click on the "thumbs up" icon in the stumble upon toolbar. A pop-up window will appear, and ask you to pick a category, a title, a description, and some "tags". Enter this information (and remember, tags should be high volume search terms...if you need to find some, use wordtracker – either the free trial or the 3 day access (use keyword researcher, and then enter a single keyword per line, and then click "research" – and look at the results...use the ones that are relevant and have lots of traffic). Don't use Overture...a lot of people recommend it, but it sucks, and using it will keep you poor. If you can't afford wordtracker, then use spyfu – it still has a free option, and might be good enough to do the job.

For digg, reddit, and propeller, you need to add a story or post. Just login to the site, and look for the new story, new link, new link, or "add" link, and click it.

Don't add anything yet – read about making a human interest post below, and then come back.

Ok, now that you have your title, and your post ready, then you simply submit it (click "post" or "save", or whatever button makes your story active). Be sure to read carefully, because some sites, like propeller, will show a page of related stories and ask you to submit only if your story is unique and not already reported.

Once your story is live, others will see it, and it will appear on a page of "new" stories. That's why you will get almost instant traffic. It is also why I recommend you post your stories around 9am Eastern, since the US is the largest audience for English stories still, and they are just waking up and going to these sites to see the new stuff of the day.

Making an Interesting Post

Making a human interest post on digg, reddit or propeller is simple, once you follow this simple recipe.

A human interest story is one that grabs you and compels you to read on. Usually, it is interactive, or emotional in nature.

It can be a story that evokes curiosity, controversy, remorse, compassion, intrigue, envy, rage, a need to contribute, and other strong emotions. It can be a story of exceptional achievement, or tragic outcomes.

For instance, a story about a natural disaster is bound to get massive attention and interest.

If you start your story with something that evokes strong emotion, people will click through to your web page, and if they are satisfied by your content, they will rank you and recommend you to friends – and when that happens, you will get a LOT more than 1,000 visitors.

Advanced Techniques

This is an optional technique that will drive your traffic even higher using the digg, reddit, propeller and stumbleupon method described above.

What you do is kick start your "story" by having others go there and recommend it. You see, all these sites have feedback mechanisms built in, and when someone says "I like it", the story gets boosted up and may appear on high traffic pages like "most popular" and "today's hot stories". Getting on a page like that can boost you up to 10,000 visitors pretty quickly.

So, to get others to vote on your story, here are some ways:
Email the link to your story to any email list you have, and ask them to vote on it. This is legal – all you are doing is asking for their opinion.

Join a group that lets you trade votes. This means you vote for someone's story (you can refrain from voting if you don't like their story, but otherwise they expect you to give a thumbs up to their story), and then ask them to vote on your story. In a good group, you can get 5-50 votes in a single day.

Some groups that support this vote trading are ISS – ISS is run by Mark Hendricks, the 12 Days of Christmas Santa, and all-around good guy. If you join ISS at the gold level, you get access to the vote trading system automatically. ISS is well worth the money, since it is both a mentoring program, wealth training system, mastermind group, and a place where you can meet others that are very successful.

ASC – ASC is Jack Humphrey's "Authority" membership site where you learn to build websites that get huge page rank and massive traffic. The vote trading (ASC Buzz Group) is one of the benefits members get, and it alone is worth the cost of membership.
